

LARGEST FORMATION OF U. S. HEAVY BOMBERS EVER TO TAKE OFF FROM BRITISH SOIL STRIKES AT EUROPE

Blistering Assaults Made on Pilotless Plane Launching Sites in France—Enemy's Secret Weapon Apparently Hammered Into Silence—Pas De Calais Area Hit Hard by Bombers.

LONDON, June 20.—(INS)—A tremendous armada of some 3,000 American warplanes, including the largest formation of U. S. heavy bombers ever to take off from British soil, struck savagely by daylight today at vital targets in Germany and pilotless plane launching sites in France.

The blistering assaults apparently hammered the enemy's secret weapon into silence. While the Nazis fired their bombs over the Channel early this morning, they lapsed into complete silence after the American formations struck the area and at a late hour this afternoon had failed to resume their attacks. The same area, centering around the Pas De Calais strip of coastal France, also was hit five times yesterday and last night.

An estimated 1,500 Fortresses and Liberators—the greatest force of daylight heavy bombers ever to hit continental Europe—formed the backbone of the attack. They were escorted by 1,500 fighters.

In addition to blasting the Pas De Calais area, the big planes rocked oil tanks and aircraft factory sites within the Reich.

Challenging Message Is Given To Young Adults

Favored by George Bunting, well-known teacher of the Harmony Men's Bible Class, of Frankford, the Young Adult Group of Bensalem Methodist Church followed their supper fellowship, Sunday evening, with a challenging address on "Freedom."

In graphic terms Mr. Bunting stressed the fact that "we tend to abuse the privileges of freedom afforded us in our land, instead of rightly accepting the responsibilities which need to accompany freedom." "Too often," he insisted, "we think in terms of freedom from something instead of in terms of freedom for a worthy purpose." Challenging the young adults to rethink this whole idea of freedom, Mr. Bunting stressed the need for seeking the "higher freedom" of life.

American Troops Within Five Miles of Cherbourg

With American Forces on the Cherbourg Front—in a series of incredibly rapid advances, American troops fought their way to within five miles of Cherbourg today and came within reaching distance of one of the greatest ports on the English Channel coast.

Early today, the Yanks were five miles from the city's outskirts and advances continued all across the Cherbourg peninsula.

Only lightest resistance was encountered from the enemy throughout yesterday and last night. Occasional groups ranging up to 250 men would hold out in isolated positions for a short time and then give in.

American troops in the center of the peninsula are well past the pivotal defense town of Valognes. Forces further east who captured Montebourg yesterday by firing only a few shots after a long period during which the town was bitterly contested, reached high ground northeast of the village during the night. Thus Valognes itself has been cut off and it will be taken shortly.

Southwest of Tilly an enemy battalion was completely smashed and the battalion staff was taken prisoner."

"On the Cherbourg peninsula no major fighting took place yesterday. Enemy armored patrols groped their way forward against the southern front of the Cherbourg fortress."

The chairmen of various committees reported on the work of their departments, an increase in activities among the groups being noted as demands on the Red Cross are greatly increased since "D" day. The army has requested the Red Cross to provide one million dressings a month, which number will be increased during the invasion of Europe. ### EFFECTIVE DIPLOMACY

Military achievements in the present war naturally overshadow the less spectacular accomplishments of diplomacy, but one diplomatic coup that should not be overlooked is the Allied success in persuading Portugal to cut off her exports of wolfram to Germany.

Portugal has announced that she will not only stop shipping the steel-hardening ore to Germany but also will shut down all her wolfram mines immediately. Inasmuch as Spain already has agreed to cut her wolfram exports to the Reich to a trickle, the Nazis now are reduced to what reserves of wolfram they have been able to accumulate, and they are not believed to be large.

Severing the supply of wolfram to Germany is expected to prove an important factor in shortening the war, since it deprives the enemy of a vitally needed war material.

In conducting the negotiations with Portugal, the United States and Britain received valuable assistance from Brazil, traditional friend of Portugal, its mother country. Even before its troops enter the actual fighting, Brazil has made outstanding contributions to the cause of the United Nations.

EVOLUTION OF FOOD

One person in five gainfully employed today is engaged in the food industry. Two hundred years ago 80 per cent of all gainful employment came from food. This change has been brought about by developments of the machine age, not by a diminution of appetites.

And the evolutionary process will continue to change the shape of things to eat after the war as never before, according to Clarence Francis, chairman of the board of directors of one of the largest food processing and distribution companies in the United States. Although he predicts that the food industry will face the most competitive era the world has ever seen after the war, Mr. Francis is not pessimistic.

New products by the hundreds, new styles and materials in packages, new services and new methods of transportation will abound in the postwar food picture, according to Mr. Francis. Research is developing packages of a beauty and economy never known before to compete on the grocer's shelves, he said.

Air transportation of fresh fruits and vegetables is being experimented with, and the food company executive is confident that the cost will be brought in line with surface transportation costs. Many items formerly discarded as waste will enter food distribution channels after the war. Many kinds of fish, used only for fertilizer before the war, are now being made into attractive spreads.

The basis for Mr. Francis' prediction that competition in the food business after the war will be keener than ever is his conviction that nine months after the start of postwar industrial reconversion the national economy will drop from a plane of $160,000,000,000 to $95,000,000,000.

NORTH to DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER I

THIS time he knew they were after him. Hand on the door, he could hear their voices echoing down the dim hotel corridor, nearer than before, and, entering the room, he closed the door softly behind him.

Warmer in there. The scent of perfume floated toward him. Across the bed lay a woman's dress, a pair of stockings, and a little heap of pale silk lingerie. On the table, an open suitcase.

Frowning, he stood hesitant, hand still on the knob, but outside the clamor of excited voices was in full cry—no going back now. The man-hunt was on.

Again his eyes traversed the room, then fixed upon the inner door. Slowly it was swinging open. A shadow fell across the floor, and he found himself looking into the startled eyes of a girl.

He was conscious first of the wine-colored robe gathered tight about her body; then of her hair—thick, full of vitality, shading from dark brown to an almost tuff lightness—hair that even in this breathless second of discovery reminded him of a wolf's pelt. And last of all he was aware of eyes that were smoky green and very long beneath black-lashed lashes.

Throughout a tense, unforgettable moment they stood at gaze, while the ticking of a clock grew louder. He saw the blood mounting to her cheeks and waited for the cry that never came.

Instead she moved forward. Her eyes passed from his face to the heavy mackinaw, the woolen field clothes and high-top moccasins. He heard the quick intake of her breath, then, the half-whispered words, "What do you want?"

The same quality of richness in her voice that he had noticed downstairs. But now he saw her fingers tighten. "Answer me!"

"Don't be frightened. He spoke in a quick, low voice.

"I'm not frightened. What are you doing here?"

No, she wasn't frightened... these cool green eyes told him she would not be frightened. She was one of those who had learned the futility of fear. The small hands that clasped the folds of her kimono—they weren't even trembling.

Rapidly she shook her head. "You must go at once or I'll—"

He raised a hand to his lips—those voices were just outside the door. She stopped, and like statues they stood barely a pace apart.

Noisily the voices passed down the hall, and he permitted himself to breathe again. She leaned forward, lips scarcely moving.

"They are looking for you?"

He motioned her back from the door, but without stirring she asked, "Are you a criminal?"

"No."

"Then why—?" She was looking at him more closely. "Have I seen you before?"

"Downstairs, at the desk. You were asking the clerk about planes to Learmonth. That's why I came here."

"But I still don't—"

"You want me to fly to Learmonth, don't you? I can help you get there."

"The clerk said there were no planes."

"There won't be any scheduled planes until the lake is frozen over. But I can charter one. It's either that or waiting here two weeks—maybe more."

"I can't wait two weeks. I have to get there sooner! I must!"

He half smiled. "There's no must in this north country."

"There is for me." The color of her cheeks deepened. "I have exactly three dollars left." She walked to the window, then swiftly turned. "Why do you need me?"

"To arrange for the plane. They'll be watching for me to do that very thing."

"And you came to my room to hide?"

Again that fleeting smile. "It was getting a little warm for me outside."

Dubiously the smoky green eyes studied him. "Who are you?"

"Colin Rae. I used to live in Learmonth."

"Do you know Rodney Selkirk, the Hendrik's Bay man there?"

"He's the closest friend I have in the world."

Her eyes were still on him, but a little of their suspicious watchfulness had drained away, and she seemed for the first time to appraise him—the square, strong face, tanned by sun and wind, the collar-neck and thick, bronzy hair, inclined to curl. She looked very small, almost childlike, in comparison, standing by the window in fleece-lined mules, the back-lighting of a low November sun glinting her hair.

eyes that still spoke their homely "You were marvelous, just now, he said."

"You know why I did that?"

"To help a man in danger."

"I don't think so. I did it because you know Rodney Selkirk—and because you can get me to Learmonth. Even if you're guilty."

She stopped, as if waiting for him to make some denial, but he had picked up the telephone book.

"Here's the airport number," he said. "Ask for Blair Benedict, and don't mention my name unless you have trouble getting the plane. Just say you want it for yourself and one passenger."

In three minutes it was done, and with a sigh of relief the girl put down the phone. "Your friend Miss

Colin Rae found himself looking into the startled eyes of a girl.

"Why are you in danger?" she asked. "If—"

A sharp rap on the door made them both whirl. Once again the knock, louder this time, and a key rattled in the lock.

Instantly she moved forward. "Who is it?" The words rang with an angry challenge.

"The police. We're looking for a man on this floor. He robbed a trapper on the train from Wolverine. We think he's in one of the rooms."

Cold as ice, the woman answered, "Then why disturb me?"

"We heard you speak. We thought—"

"I was having tea with him?"

Rae looked at her in new surprise: the voice was so coldly withering.

"No, madam. But we have to make sure. If you don't mind—"

The key turned, the door began opening, and Rae flattened himself against the wall, ready to strike. But the woman had placed herself directly before the door. She made no move to touch it; she merely stood there, hands crossed about her dressing robe, eyes blazing; then she commanded, "Close that door!"

It closed. In hasty retreat the footsteps moved away; the smoky eyes raised to his, and to Colin's amazement he saw they were smiling. It was superb acting, and his own eyes lighted with admiration, while he stood in silence until a key clicked farther down the hall.

"Were they really the police?" she whispered.

"No. I recognized that voice: it was one of the gang who followed me down. But if I don't get out of Winnipeg soon, they may trump up some charge with the police to hold me here." He looked at her with Benedict has a nice voice. Her plane will be ready to take off in two hours, and the price is two hundred and fifty dollars." She glanced up at him dubiously, and he touched his pocket.

"Yes, I have the money." He looked at his watch. "We'd better leave here in a half hour: the airport's a long way out. Now if the weather just holds!"

Walking to the window, he pulled back the curtain, then, dropping it, stepped back quickly.

Across the street a man was standing, looking up at the hotel; a small, frail-looking man with spectacles, a faded derby, and black, almost clerical clothes.

Rae heard the girl's robe rustle behind him. "Don't touch that curtain," he warned.

"Who is he?"

In a tense, tight voice he answered, "Once I heard him called the most dangerous man in Canada."

"Why?"

"I never knew: the man who said it is dead."

Silence fell, filled with the heavy implications of unspoken things, while down in the street the solitary watcher continued his leisurely examination of every window.

Incredulously she raised her eyes. "You're so big, and you're afraid of that little man?"

A brief smile softened his face. "Your bathtub will run over," he reminded her.

Without a word she gathered up her clothes from the bed and closed the inner door after her.

DESPITE HOME RUNS ROHM & HAAS NINE LOSE TO CASE TEAM

Di Tanna and Sullivan Make Good Drives in Effort To Win Game

FINAL SCORE IS 14 TO 8

Chemical Mixers Play Loose Ball and Doughty Was Wild

TRENTON, N. J., June 20.—Despite home runs from the bats of "Lefty" DiTanna and "Eddie" Sullivan, the Rohm and Haas team lost its 15th straight game in the Trenton Industrial League last evening. The winning aggregation was the Case Packers with the final score being 14-8.

Sullivan's drive came in the final inning with two on base and was one of the longest hits of the season on Wetzel field. DiTanna's four-base ply scored "Bill" Ritter ahead of him in the fourth inning.

The chemical mixers played loose ball and this coupled with wildness on the part of Doughty helped the Trenton team to pile in the runs. In the first frame alone, the Packers scored three times without the benefit of a base hit, an error and four passes doing the trick.

Rohm and Haas outlived the winners, 13-11, with Irv Hetherington, Dick, and DiTanna getting three safe blows each.

NEW LOGGING IDEA

McKINLEY, Ore. — (INS) — A method of driving logs in shallow streams like the east and north forks of the Coquille River has proved successful. Ivan Larid invented the idea of a donkey engine on a scow which has cleared streams of many logs that otherwise would have to wait until next winter's rains. Logs, stranded along the banks have also been pushed along in this way.

24 COLLEGIANS IN NATIONAL LEAGUE THIS SEASON

Fit To Face Any Other Combination In The League

SQUAD NUMBERS 24

Alma Mater Spread Reaches From Harvard To Whitman College

(By International News Service)

NEW YORK, June 20 — College men are prominent in the National League's spring picture this year. The freshmen class, players serving their first year in the parent major league, can muster a full-strength squad of collegians, 24 strong, a freshman team fit to face any 24-strong lineup lifted from the league's upper classes and give it a battle.

The alma mater spread of the two dozen reaches from Harvard in coastal Massachusetts, to Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash. Its northernmost point is St. Lawrence in Quebec, its most southerly the Caracas Military Academy, way down Venezuela.

Soon every National League club will have to reduce its roster to the 25-player limit. This happens in mid-May most years. This year it's about a month later. There are only 24 of the National League. All collegiate freshmen now, but before the farming out process sent the boys all directions the rookie list showed about 40 collegians.

The May All-Collegiate line up 8 pitchers, 2 catchers, 9 infielders and 5 outfielders, well-enough balanced to take the field today. Put in Frank Frisch, of Fordham University, as manager, and the campus kidlets are all set to boost higher education still higher.

Picking the starting lineup would give the Fordham Flash considerable struggle in some spots. For first base he would have to choose between Harvard's Ulysses Lupien, of the Phillies, and Steeple Schultz, Brooklyn's tower of strength from Hamline University, St. Paul, Minn., both of whom started the 1944 season like a couple of houses on fire.

At second, he'd maybe have to toss up between two bright spring bloomers, Ford (Moon) Mullen, who's manned the keystone for the Phillies and led off the batting order right from the season's start, and Hugh (Hal) Luby, of the Giants.

Luby brought to the big leagues from Oakland the all-time Pacific Coast League record of 866 games, five complete seasons without being marked absent. The Helms Athletic Foundation out there voted him their Player-of-the-Year, regardless of the writers picking Andy Pafko, of Los Angeles, now of the Chicago Cubs.

The high light of the Polo Grounds season-opener was Luby's double in the 7th to win the 2-1 decision. He started off playing third for Ott, but at Oakland he was mainly a second baseman. His alma mater was Creighton University, Omaha, Neb. Mullen has his B. S. from the University of Oregon.

Shortstop would belong to Bill Schuster, U. of Buffalo, last year's Pacific Coast League leading runner, fourth in Most-Valuable-Player voting, two writers ranking him No. 1. Bill was with Los Angeles then, this year the Cubs. For sub there's Warren Hutson, Springfield College, now the Braves.

The third-base squad offers Buck Fausett, Cincinnati Reds, who camped at East Texas State College, hit .362 as player-manager of Little Rock last year, was third MVP in the Southern Association. Backing him up is Roland Gladi, the Canadian hockey player out of St. Lawrence College, Quebec, who served a year in the Canadian Army overseas, started at third for the Boston Braves starting off the season. Another third baseman is Kermit Wahl, fresh out of Indiana U., who joined Cincinnati when the Reds spring-trained on his campus.

Frisch's outfield squad lists a Cub, three Reds and a Giant. His fixture is Ed. Sauer, Southern Association batting champ and Most-Valuable-Player of 1943. Ed's campus was Elon College, his 1944 affiliation, the Cubs.

Frisch can jockey the other four around to flank his star as fits the situation. Two of his Reds are right-hand hitters, Dain Clay, from Kentucky State University, and Chucho Ramos, the military academy cadet from Venezuela. His third Red, Tony Criscola, from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash., and his Giant, Bruce Sloan, Oklahoma City U., hit left-handed.

Bob Finley, B. S. from Southern Methodist, and Bill Ansko, Marietta College and U. S. Army, give Frisch an all-Phillies' catching staff. His pitching staff is very green, measured by big league standards, but very smart, judging by the fact that five of the eight have their degrees.

The Braves' John Dagenhard, 18-game winner at Hartford last year, has his AB from Ohio State, their Carl Lindquist (15 for Hartford) has his BS from Mansfield, Pa., State Teachers College, the Cubs' Dale Anderson (13 and 7 for the champion Nashvilles in '43) is AB from Upper Iowa University, the Phillies' Anton Karl has his BS from Manhattan College and their George Copeland has the same from Ithaca College.

One of the American columns advanced toward the village of Ravville La Bigot, about eight and one-half miles below Cherbourg, while frontline dispatches placed the forward U. S. elements within less than eight miles of the port. Another Yank force gained some ground east of Valognes, about the same distance southeast of Cherbourg. But, according to the Allies' radio, these forces were within six and one-quarter miles of the port.

Southeast of Bayeux, meantime, British forces once again drove the Germans from the town of Tilly-sur-Seuilles. After fierce armored and infantry engagements, the Britons sent patrols south toward Hottor, about two miles distant.

Describing the Cherbourg front as "fluid," a headquarters spokesman stressed that the Americans were firmly establishing themselves and protecting their rear from possible German attack.

The wedge driven across the Cherbourg peninsula from coast to coast was steadily widened and strengthened. The spokesman said it was extended to a distance of from five miles to 16 miles.

An estimated 25,000 to 30,000 German troops, elements of three battered Nazi divisions, are trapped above the trans-peninsula wedge and face the choice of ultimate capture or death. The estimate that perhaps 50,000 Nazis may be in this pocket was termed "probably exaggerated" by headquarters.

MARINE HUMOR

SOUTH PACIFIC BASE — (INS) — The bulletin board serves U. S. Marines as their daily newspaper and one is complete even to the lost and found column, according to Sgt. Bill Allen, a Marine Corps combat correspondent. Recently, on the column of missing articles, some wit made the following entry: "LOST—two years of furloughs."

SOMEWHERE IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC — (INS) — "Jockey suits" is the name that Australian troops have given the camouflaged jungle suits of U. S. Marines. Leather-necks agree that the name is an apt one. It is especially fitting when Marines tuck the camouflage trousers into their socks and wear one of the peaked caps popular here. A Marine so attired could easily pass for a jockey on his way to weigh in for the next race.

LARGEST FORMATION OF U. S. HEAVY BOMBERS EVER TO TAKE OFF FROM BRITISH SOIL STRIKES AT EUROPE

Blistering Assaults Made on Pilotless Plane Launching Sites in France—Enemy's Secret Weapon Apparently Hammered Into Silence—Pas De Calais Area Hit Hard by Bombers.

LONDON, June 20—(INS)—A tremendous armada of some 3,000 American warplanes, including the largest formation of U. S. heavy bombers ever to take off from British soil, struck savagely by daylight today at vital targets in Germany and pilotless plane launching sites in France.

The blistering assaults apparently hammered the enemy's secret weapon into silence. While the Nazis fired their bumblebombs over the Channel early this morning, they lapsed into complete silence after the American formations struck the area and at a late hour this afternoon had failed to resume their attacks. The same area, centering around the Pas De Calais strip of coastal France, also was hit five times yesterday and last night.

An estimated 1,500 Fortresses and Liberators—the greatest force of daylight heavy bombers ever to hit continental Europe—formed the backbone of the attack. They were escorted by 1,500 fighters.

In addition to blasting the Pas De Calais area, the big planes rocked oil tanks and aircraft factory sites within the Reich.

Challenging Message Is Given To Young Adults

Favored by George Bunting, well-known teacher of the Harmony Men's Bible Class, of Frankford, the Young Adult Group of Bensalem Methodist Church followed their supper fellowship, Sunday evening, with a challenging address on "Freedom."

In graphic terms Mr. Bunting stressed the fact that "we tend to abuse the privileges of freedom afforded us in our land, instead of rightly accepting the responsibilities which need to accompany freedom." "Too often," he insisted, "we think in terms of freedom from something instead of in terms of freedom for a worthy purpose."

Challenging the young adults to re-think this whole field of freedom, Mr. Bunting stressed the need for seeking the "higher freedom" of life.

THE WAR AT A GLANCE

By International News Service

American armor and infantry smashed all across the Cherbourg peninsula today in coordinated attacks intended to crush the Nazi garrison within the important port of Cherbourg.

The attacks were made by independent combat teams of Lieut. Gen. Omar N. Bradley's airborne troops, tank and infantry units. However, they were integrated under a single command.

Supporting the advance which tightened the siege are below Cherbourg was the fire of 155 mm. Long Tom artillery guns. The huge Allied rifles kept the port under fire, Allied headquarters said.

American Troops Within Five Miles of Cherbourg

With American Forces on the Cherbourg Front—In a series of incredibly rapid advances, American troops fought their way to within five miles of Cherbourg today and came within reaching distance of one of the greatest ports on the English Channel coast.

Early today, the Yanks were five miles from the city's outskirts and advances continued all across the Cherbourg peninsula. Only lightest resistance was encountered from the enemy throughout yesterday and last night. Occasional groups ranging up to 250 men would hold out in isolated positions for a short time and then give in.

American troops in the center of the peninsula are well past the pivotal defense town of Valognes. Forces further east who captured Montebourg yesterday by firing only a few shots after a long period during which the town was bitterly contested, reached high ground northeast of the village during the night. Thus Valognes itself has been cut off and it will be taken shortly.

Germans Report Strong Allied Attacks

London—The German high command today reported strong Allied attacks in the Tilly-Livry area in Normandy.

"The fighting in Normandy caused the enemy very heavy losses yesterday," the Nazi communique asserted. "The enemy tried to pierce our front in the Tilly-Livry area on a broad front, attacking repeatedly with strong infantry and tank forces. Southwest of Tilly an enemy battalion was completely smashed and the battalion staff was taken prisoner.

"On the Cherbourg peninsula no major fighting took place yesterday. Enemy armored patrols groped their way forward against the southern front of the Cherbourg fortress."

Workers for Red Cross Make Monthly Reports

The monthly meeting of the board of directors, Bristol Branch of the American Red Cross, took place yesterday afternoon at the local Red Cross headquarters on Mill St. Mrs. Russell De Long, chairman, presided.

The chairmen of various committees reported on the work of their departments, an increase in activities among the groups being noted as demands on the Red Cross are greatly increased since "D" day. The response of volunteers at the surgical dressings rooms on "D" day was mentioned as being very gratifying, but the chairman, Mrs. Sydney Longbottom, asked for many more volunteers to help make these much-needed dressings. The army has requested the Red Cross to provide one million dressings a month, which number will be increased during the invasion of Europe. Members were informed that many of these dressings are sent to aid Americans who are prisoners of war in Italy, North Africa, in the jungles of the South Pacific, and many other isolated points.

Report was made on donations of blood on May 27th by employees of Fleetwings, Inc., when 214 pints were received. The blood donors mobile unit will return to Bristol on July 24th and 25th, it was announced, and the public will be afforded an opportunity to donate blood at that time.

The local board was pleased to learn that Mrs. Carl Foell, chairman of Bristol Junior Red Cross, has been chosen as Junior Red Cross representative for Region No. 1 on the chapter executive junior committee.

The countless duties and activities that devolve upon Mrs. Marie Holland, of the Bristol Red Cross office, were reported upon by Mrs. Holland.

EFFECTIVE DIPLOMACY

Military achievements in the present war naturally overshadow the less spectacular accomplish-ments of diplomacy, but one diplomatic coup that should not be overlooked is the Allied suc-cess in persuading Portugal to cut off her exports of wolfram to Ger-many.

Portugal has announced that she will not only stop shipping the steel-hardening ore to Ger-many but also will shut down all her wolfram mines immediately. Inasmuch as Spain already has agreed to cut her wolfram exports to the Reich to a trickle, the Nazis now are reduced to what reserves of wolfram they have been able to accumulate, and they are not believed to be large.

Severing the supply of wolfram to Germany is expected to prove an important factor in shortening the war, since it deprives the enemy of a vitally needed war material.

In conducting the negotiations with Portugal, the United States and Britain received valuable as-sistance from Brazil, traditional friend of Portugal, its mother country. Even before its troops enter the actual fighting, Brazil has made outstanding contribu-tions to the cause of the United Nations.

EVOLUTION OF FOOD

One person in five gainfully employed today is engaged in the food industry. Two hundred years ago 80 per cent of all gain-ful employment came from food. This change has been brought about by developments of the ma-chine age, not by a diminution of appetites.

And the evolutionary process will continue to change the shape of things to eat after the war as never before, according to Clare-nce Francis, chairman of the board of directors of one of the largest food processing and dis-tribution companies in the United States. Although he predicts that the food industry will face the most competitive era the world has ever seen after the war, Mr. Francis is not pessimistic.

New products by the hun-dreds, new styles and materials in packages, new services and new methods of transportation will abound in the postwar food picture, according to Mr. Francis. Research is developing packages of a beauty and economy never known before to compete on the grocer's shelves, he said.

Air transportation of fresh fruits and vegetables is being ex-perimented with, and the food company executive is confident that the cost will be brought in line with surface transportation costs. Many items formerly dis-carded as waste will enter food distribution channels after the war. Many kinds of fish, used only for fertilizer before the war, are now being made into attrac-tive spreads.

The basis for Mr. Francis' pre-diction that competition in the food business after the war will be keener than ever is his convic-tion that nine months after the start of postwar industrial recon-struction the national economy will drop from a plane of $160,000,000,000 to $95,000,000,000.

NORTH to DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER I

THIS time he knew they were after him. Hand on the door, he could hear their voices echoing down the dim hotel cor-ridor, nearer than before, and, enter-ing the room, he closed the door softly behind him.

Warmer in there. The scent of perfume floated toward him. Across the bed lay a woman's dress, a pair of stockings, and a little heap of pale silk lingerie. On the table, an open suitcase.

Frowning, he stood hesitant, hand still on the knob, but outside the clamor of excited voices was in full cry—going back now. The man-hunt was on.

Again his eyes traversed the room, then fixed upon the inner door. Slowly it was swinging open, and he found himself looking into the startled eyes of a girl.

He was conscious first of the wine-colored robe gathered tight about her body; then of her hair—thick, full of vitality, shading from dark brown to an almost tawny light-ness—hair that even in this breath-less second of discovery reminded him of a wolf's pelt. And last of all he was aware of eyes that were smoky green and very long beneath black, level lashes.

Throughout a tense, unforget-able moment they stood at gaze, while the ticking of a clock grew louder. He saw the blood mounting to her cheeks and waited for the cry that never came.

Instead she moved forward. Her eyes passed from his face to the heavy mackinaw, the woolen field clothes and high-top moccasins. He heard the quick intake of her breath, then the half-whispered words, "What do you want?"

The same quality of richness in her voice that he had noticed down-stairs. But now he saw her fingers tighten. "Answer me!"

"Don't be frightened." He spoke in a quick, low voice.

"I'm not frightened. What are you doing here?"

No, she wasn't frightened... those cool green eyes told him she would not be frightened. She was one of those who had learned the faculty of fear. The small hands that clasped the folds of her kimono—they weren't even trembling.

Rapidly she shook her head. "You must go at once or I'll—"

He raised a hand to his lips—those voices were just outside the door. She stopped, and like statues they stood barely a pace apart.

Noisily the voices passed down the hall, and he permitted himself to breathe again. She leaned forward, lips scarcely moving.

"They are looking for you?" He motioned her back from the door, but without stirring she asked, "Are you a criminal?"

"No."

"Then why—?" She was looking at him more closely. "Have I seen you before?"

"Downstairs, at the desk. You were asking the clerk about planes to Learmonth. That's why I came here."

"But I still don't—"

"I want to fly to Learmonth, don't you? I can help you get there."

"The clerk said there were no planes."

"There won't be any scheduled planes until the lake is frozen over. But I can charter one. It's either that or waiting here two weeks—maybe more."

"I can't wait two weeks. I have to get there sooner! I must!"

He half-smiled. "There's no must in this north country."

"There is for me." The color of her cheek deepened. "I have exactly three dollars left." She walked toward the window, then swiftly turned. "Why do you need me?"

"To arrange for the plane. They'll be watching for me to do that very thing."

"And you came to my room to hide?"

Again that fleeting smile. "It was getting a little warm for me out-side."

Dubiously the smoky green eyes studied him. "Who are you?"

"Colin Rae. I used to live in Learmonth."

"Do you know Rodney Selkirk, the Hendrik's Bay man there?"

"He's the closest friend I have in the world."

Her eyes were still on him, but a little of their suspicious watchful-ness had drained away, and she seemed for the first time to ap-praise him—the square, strong face, tanned by sun and wind, the col-umbar neck and thick, bronzy hair, inclined to curl. She looked very small, almost childlike, in compar-ison, standing by the window in fleece-lined mules, the back-lighting of a low November sun glinting hair.

In three minutes it was done, and with a sigh of relief the girl put down the phone. "Your friend Miss Benedict has a nice voice. Her plane will be ready to take off in two hours, and the price is two hundred and fifty dollars." She glanced up at him dubiously, and he touched his pocket.

"Yes, I have the money." He looked at his watch. "We'd better leave here in a half hour; the air-port's a long way out. Now if the weather just holds!"

Walking to the window, he pulled back the curtain, then, dropping it, stepped back quickly.

Across the street a man was standing, looking up at the hotel: a small, frail-looking man with spectacled eyes, a faded derby, and black, almost clerical clothes.

Rae heard the girl's robe rustle behind him. "Don't touch that cur-tain," he warned.

"Who is he?"

In a tense, tight voice he an-swered, "Once I heard him called the most dangerous man in Cana-da."

"Why?"

"I never knew; the man who said it is dead."

Silence fell, filled with the heavy implications of unspoken things, while down in the street the solitary watcher continued his leisurely ex-amination of every window.

Incredulously she raised her eyes. "You're so big, and you're afraid of that little man?"

Without a word she gathered up her clothes from the bed and closed the inner door after her.

DESPITE HOME RUNS ROHM & HAAS NINE LOSE TO CASE TEAM

Di Tanna and Sullivan Make Good Drives in Effort To Win Game

FINAL SCORE IS 14 TO 8

Chemical Mixers Play Loose Ball and Doughty Was Wild

TRENTON, N. J., June 20—Despite home runs from the bats of "Lefty" DiTanna and "Eddie" Sullivan, the Rohm and Haas team lost its 15th straight game in the Trenton Industrial League last evening. The winning aggregation was the Case Packers with the final score being 14-8.

Sullivan's drive came in the final inning with two on base and was one of the longest hits of the season on Wetzel field. DiTanna's four-base ply scored "Bill" Ritter ahead of him in the fourth inning.

The chemical mixers played loose ball and this coupled with wildness on the part of Doughty helped the Trenton team to pile in the runs. In the first frame alone, the Packers scored three times without the benefit of a base hit, an error and four passes doing the trick.

Rohm and Haas outbit the winners, 13-11, with Irv Hetherington, Dick, and DiTanna getting three runs each.

24 COLLEGIANS IN NATIONAL LEAGUE THIS SEASON

Fit To Face Any Other Combination In The League

SQUAD NUMBERS 24

Alma Mater Spread Reaches From Harvard To Whitman College

(By International News Service)

NEW YORK, June 20 — College men are prominent in the National League's spring picture this year. The freshmen class, players serving their first year in the parent major league, can muster a full-strength squad of collegians, 24 strong, a freshman team fit to face any 24-strong lineup lifted from the league's upper classes and give it a battle.

The alma mater spread of the two dozen reaches from Harvard in coastal Massachusetts, to Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash. Its northernmost point is St. Lawrence in Quebec, its most southerly the Caracas Military Academy, way down Venezuela.

Soon every National League club will have to reduce its roster to the 25-player limit. This happens in mid-May most years. This year it's about a month later. There are only 24 of the National League All-Collegiate freshmen now, but before the farming out process sent the boys all directions the rookie list showed about 40 collegians.

The May All-Collegiate line up 8 pitchers, 2 catchers, 9 infielders and 5 outfielders, well-enough balanced to take the field today. Put in Frank Frisch, of Fordham University, as manager, and the campus kidlets are all set to boost higher education still higher.

Picking the starting lineup would give the Fordham Flash considerable struggle in some spots. For first base he would have to choose between Harvard's Ulysses Lupien, of the Phillies, and Steeple Schultz, Brooklyn's tower of strength from Hamline University, St. Paul, Minn., both of whom started the 1944 season like a couple of houses on fire.

At second, he'd maybe have to toss up between two bright spring bloomers, Ford (Moon) Mullen, who's named the keystone for the Phillies and led off the batting order right from the season's start, and Hugh (Hal) Luby, of the Giants.

Luby brought to the big leagues from Oakland the all-time Pacific Coast League record of 866 games, five complete seasons without being marked absent. The Helms Athletic Foundation out there voted him their Player-of-the-Year, regardless of the writers picking Andy Pafko, of Los Angeles, now of the Chicago Cubs.

The high light of the Polo Grounds season-opener was Luby's double in the 7th to win the 2-1 decision. He started off playing third for Ott, but at Oakland he was mainly a second baseman. His alma mater was Creighton University, Omaha, Neb. Mullen has his B. S. from the University of Oregon.

Shortstop would belong to Bill Schuster, U. of Buffalo, last year's Pacific Coast League leading runner, fourth in Most-Valuable-Player voting, two writers ranking him No. 1. Bill was with Los Angeles then, this year the Cubs. For sub there's Warren Hutson, Springfield College, now the Braves.

The third-base squad offers Buck Fausett, Cincinnati Reds, who camped at East Texas State College, hit .362 as player-manager of Little Rock last year, was third MVP in the Southern Association. Backing him up is Roland Glada, the Canadian hockey player out of St. Lawrence College, Quebec, who served a year in the Canadian Army overseas, starred at third for the Boston Braves starting off the season. Another third baseman is Kermit Wahl, fresh out of Indiana U., who joined Cincinnati when the Reds spring-trained on his campus.

Frisch's outfield squad lists a Cub, three Reds and a Giant. His fixture is Ed. Sauer, Southern Association batting champ and Most-Valuable Player of 1943. Ed's campus was Elon College, his 1944 affiliation, the Cubs.

Frisch can jockey the other four around to flank his star as fits the situation. Two of his Reds are right-hand hitters, Dain Clay, from Kentucky State University, and Chuecho Ramos, the military academy cadet from Venezuela. His third Red, Tony Criscola, from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash., and his Giant, Bruce Sloan, Oklahoma City U., hit left-handed.

Bob Finley, B. S. from Southern Methodist, and Bill Anske, Marietta College and U. S. Army, give Frisch an all-Phillies' catching staff. His pitching staff is very green, measured by big league standards, but very smart, judging by the fact that five of the eight have their degrees.

The Braves' John Dagenhard, 18, game winner at Hartford last year, has his AB from Ohio State, their Carl Lindquist (15 for Hartford) has his BS from Mansfield, Pa. State Teachers College, the Cubs' Dale Anderson (13 and 7 for the champion Nashvilles in '43) is AB from Upper Iowa University, the Phillies' Anton Karl has his BS from Manhattan College and their George Copeland has the same from Ithaca College.

One of the American columns advanced toward the village of Rauville La Birot, about eight and one-half miles below Cherbourg, while front-line dispatches placed the forward U. S. elements within less than eight miles of the port. Another Yank force gained some ground east of Valognes, about the same distance southeast of Cherbourg. But, according to the Algers radio, these forces were within six and one-quarter miles of the port.

Southeast of Bayeux, meantime, British forces once again drove the Germans from the town of Tilly-sur-Seuilles. After fierce armored and infantry engagements, the Britons sent patrols south toward Hottot, about two miles distant.

Describing the Cherbourg front as "fluid," a headquarters spokesman stressed that the Americans were firmly establishing themselves and protecting their rear from possible German attack.

The wedge driven across the Cherbourg peninsula from coast to coast was steadily widened and strengthened. The spokesman said it was extended to a distance of from five miles to 16 miles.

An estimated 25,000 to 30,000 German troops, elements of three lattered Nazi divisions, are trapped above the trans-peninsular wedge and face the choice of ultimate capture or death. The estimate that perhaps 50,000 Nazis may be in this pocket was termed "probably exaggerated" by headquarters.

MARINE HUMOR

SOUTH PACIFIC BASE—(INS) —The bulletin board serves U. S. Marines as their daily newspaper and one is complete even to the lost and found column, according to Sgt. Bill Allen, a Marine Corps combat correspondent. Recently, on the column of missing articles, some wit made the following entry: "LOST—two years of furloughs."

SOMEWHERE IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC — (INS) — "Jockey suits" is the name that Australian troops have given the camouflaged jungle suits of U. S. Marines. Leather-necks agree that the name is an apt one. It is especially fitting when Marines tuck the camouflage trousers into their socks and wear one of the peaked caps popular here. A Marine so attired could easily pass for a jockey on his way to weigh in for the next race.
